It is always my pleasure to share our latest issue of the Bay Pathway with you.

Within the magazine's covers, you will find news and recent announcements that will become part of our University's history, updates on how our alumni continue to be engaged with the Bay Path community and the amazing accomplishments of our Bay Path alumni.

These efforts, noteworthy on their own, come together to produce one important and singular impact: They increase the value of your Bay Path degree. When we do good, when our alumni do good and when our students do good, all of us benefit.

Of late, the word “value” has also been linked to higher education. I am sure that many of you have heard the question, “Is college worth it?”

The answer is a resounding: “Yes.”

Evidence shows that when you have a college degree, you earn more over a lifetime and have a higher level of job security during times of economic uncertainty (Strada Education Foundation).

Today, across the country, jobs are presently going unfilled because of a lack of available or skilled talent in many critical areas, for example, healthcare, mental health counseling, teaching and cybersecurity. These professions require a degree, ensuring both knowledge and experience. As consumers, clients and patients, we should have confidence that we are receiving the best in service and care.

At Bay Path, anchored by our longstanding, career-focused mission, we can address this workforce need. Our graduates are positioned to enter professions that open gateways of opportunities for them, and, at the same time, address pain points where there are labor shortages. In this issue, we look at how our graduates in physician assistant studies and psychology are stepping up to be providers in primary care and mental health counseling respectively. These are just two examples of how our academic programs respond to the needs of the workforce, and the relevance of the work we do day in and day out on behalf of our students.

As alumni and friends of Bay Path, you also know first-hand the value of a Bay Path education. You can do your part in helping us grow the talent pipeline for many critical professions in our country by sharing your Bay Path story with a prospective student. There is no better endorsement than word of mouth and personal recommendations. Making a difference can start with a simple conversation.

I look forward to having a conversation with you. Our alumni affairs department is planning many events in the upcoming year, including Reunion on Saturday, October 14, and I encourage you to attend and reconnect with old friends and make new ones. I hope to see you there.

In the spirit that guides us all: Carpe Diem!

Diane Almonte Arias ’23 hails from Hartford, CT, and received her Bachelor of Arts in Communications. She proudly wears her commencement stoles which represent her identity and accomplishments as an undergraduate. The multicolored Kente stole was a gift from the Office of Multicultural Affairs for her contributions to the Diversity, Equity, Inclusion, and Belonging efforts on campus, and also affirms her identity as an Afro-Latina. The vibrant red, white, and blue custom stole represents the flag of the Dominican Republic, a symbol of her proud family heritage. Inscriptions decorate the entire stole and highlight her role as a campus leader and president of ALANA (African American / Latina / Asian / Native American / Allies), and her major in communications with a minor in sociology. With this visible statement, Diane serves as the voice of the graduating class of 2023 as they go out and change the world!
It’s a frustration many of us have felt. You pick up the phone and can’t get an appointment with your primary care office.

Across the country, our healthcare network is facing a crisis at one of its most critical entry points in patient care. Family medicine offices, also known as primary care, are buckling under the strain of doctors retiring from practices, increased demands for healthcare further amplified by the COVID pandemic and staffing shortages.

The importance of primary care cannot be underestimated. It is the foundation of our healthcare system. For many of us, when you are ill or have a problem, the first person we speak to is a primary care provider, or PCP. And whether you live in a rural area or an urban neighborhood, your primary care office most likely is staffed by a team of PCPs, led by a physician, and includes nurse practitioners and physician assistants, known as PAs. They are your long-term partners, sharing the responsibility for your physical health and well-being.

While there is much work to be done in shoring up primary care so that it can be the best that it can be—such as offering more incentives for medical students to enter primary care, decreasing administrative work, lessening insurance regulation and investing more into the primary care system—the medical professionals who work in the primary care field believe strongly they are making a difference at a personal and community level. And physician assistants are a big part of this solution.

Bay Path physician assistants are stepping up to play a vital role in the primary care system

And physician assistants are a big part of this solution.

According to the National Commission on Certification of Physician Assistant’s (NCCPA) 2021 Statistical Profile of Certified PAs, the family medicine sector experienced the greatest proportional growth between 2017 and 2021 for all graduating PAs across the country.

Facts about primary care

There are 168.7 primary care providers (PCPs) for every 100,000 Americans.

51.1 percent of PCPs are nurse practitioners and physician assistants

Since graduating from Bay Path, Emanuel “Manny” Parrilla G’20, has worked at the Baystate High Street Health Center Adult Medicine in Springfield.

“During school, and after I graduated from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, in 2017, I worked as an EMT. We responded to mostly trauma and Level I calls. In my senior year, I decided to be a physician assistant because I wanted to know what had happened to those people our EMT team had helped, and, in some cases, if their problems could have been addressed earlier. Over time, I learned that primary care was important because it is preventative care. If more people had access to PCPs, there would be less strain on ERs.

If I were to say what would make a difference in our health system, it would be educating people to make them aware that they don’t have to go the ER as their first option and having more people go into primary or family care. Other medical specialties may pay more, but I believe that if you want to make a real and noticeable impact in a person’s life, practicing primary care is second to none.

Do I love my job? Absolutely. I’ve developed a rapport with my patients, and at the same time, I know I am working for my community. I put in a lot of hours, but my job is incredibly satisfying. Every day is different. Every day has new challenges. But I am also lucky. I can see my rewards every day in the faces of my patients.”

Robert O’Rourke G’18 is a staff provider at Northwest Community Health Center in Libby, Montana. Nestled in northwest Montana, the location is both a blessing and a detriment.

“I worked as a respiratory therapist for 17 years at a local hospital. Ultimately, I was recruited by a cardiologist friend who encouraged me to go back to college to be a PA. Our area of the country is resource-strapped for providers, so I could see there was an immediate need.

Our practice covers Lincoln County, and we serve around 15,000 people. In a typical day, I see everything. Even in my first week on the job, I saw patients from five days old to 95 years old. It is the beauty of primary care. You see something different every day. You never get bored.

One of the challenges we have out here is definitely staffing. First, there are just not enough providers going into family care. That’s true across the country, particularly in rural areas. And then there is the location. It seems romantic to move to the big outdoors of Montana, but when a person experiences the remoteness and the reality of long winters, well, it makes it hard to retain people. But all the providers from the various clinics work together to give our Lincoln County the best healthcare. It’s a special place.

Yes, I love my job. There is a lot to be said for providing care in a small community, and there is a real satisfaction in helping to make people’s lives better. You are giving back to a community that you love, and it cultivates a sense of belonging. Personally, I have regular experiences when someone will come in and they will be at a low point in their lives, and I am able to make a huge impact. And then when I see them doing well—it doesn’t get any better!”

In late November 2022, the artificial intelligence (AI) research laboratory OpenAI unveiled ChatGPT to the public, simultaneously delivering a clearer picture of the future and a foggier understanding of our place in it.

While the “chat” of ChatGPT is familiar to anyone who’s booked rental cars, reserved airline seats and asked billing questions at the bottom corner of his or her computer screen, the “GPT,” or generative pre-trained transformer, prompted widespread awe.

“Pre-trained” refers to the data the machine has access to; it’s what the generative part is working off of—the noise that’s shaping the language the program will speak.

“Transformer” is akin to the brain; it’s the architecture that enables the system to take in all that data, process it and then put it back out to us.

Although AI existed before ChatGPT, the allure of interacting with such a coherent, precise and uncannily human model has forced a universal reckoning, especially at colleges and universities.

“I’ve been thinking a lot about ChatGPT’s impact on my program and my job,” notes Xiaoxia Liu, the director of Bay Path’s MS in Applied Data Science program. “My two main concerns are: one, ethical use. It’s crucial to establish responsible guidelines and policies to prevent misuse, especially for class assignments and projects. And the other is how it will affect our students. Generative AI models have the potential to automate certain tasks traditionally performed by a junior data analyst or data scientist, and it may disrupt our graduates’ targeted job markets.”

The true challenge, for higher ed and the workforce writ large, lies in seeking ways to use artificial intelligence productively—to help us navigate information, consider a range of possibilities and lead us toward a broader scope of potential solutions, while keeping one eye focused on its capacity to wreak societal-scale disruption.

On a winding path, in a small New England town,
There’s a place of learning where knowledge is found.
A place where dreams are born and futures take flight,
Bay Path University shining bright.

Chorus:
Bay Path University, a beacon of education,
Where women learn and lead with dedication.
With a spirit of innovation and inclusivity,
Bay Path is the place to achieve possibility.

In classrooms and labs, with professors who care,
Students explore, discover and dare.
From business to psychology, health sciences to arts,
Bay Path provides the skills that launch a start.

Chorus repeats

Bay Path University, renowned and true,
We honor and celebrate all that you do.
May you continue to light the way,
For generations of students every day.

Looking beyond the classroom
As part of a recent round-up in the Chronicle of Higher Education, education leaders shared views on both the promising and problematic ways AI could impact higher education. Education author Jeffrey Selingo sees how AI could be applied to shift money and resources toward the student experience, rather than the functions that take place outside the classroom, which account for a hefty chunk of tuition dollars.

The thinking goes that using AI to take some of the administrative burden off of financial aid, registrar and admissions offices frees people and resources up to do the work of supporting students, a concept that resonates with Bay Path’s President Sandra Doran.

“Bay Path tapped into the capabilities of analyzing large swaths of data early on to identify student behaviors at The American Women’s College with the SOUL (Social Universal Online Learning) model. That analysis instigated high-touch interventions from coaches and teachers and led to graduation rates that were significantly higher than comparable programs,” she explained.

“Our Student Success Center is going to bring that concept to the next level, centralizing a student’s academic pathway and performance, along with their financial aid, career services and ongoing engagement, so that we can employ the appropriate resources and support at different points in their journey,” Doran notes. “At Bay Path, we are poised to harness the power of these tools and the power that comes from thinking about how we should best embrace them.”

See page 15 for more information on our Student Success Center.

have experimented with using ChatGPT and Generative AI to assist with coding questions, demonstrating how AI can enhance the collaborative process.

“In ADS534, our Statistical Modeling course, students shared different answers that ChatGPT gave to specific coding questions,” says Liu. “They got different answers based on how they asked the questions, and then these answers were explored in further discussions.”
Over the decades, America has struggled with the stigma of mental illness and therapy. Perceptions are slowly changing, aided by a pandemic that expanded our willingness to speak of depression, anxiety, stress, loneliness and other conditions that were previously referenced in often-hushed tones.

Overall, mental illness has risen in the United States. Dramatically. A number of factors have played a part in this, including the escalation of social media that has now been found to negatively impact children and young adults—confirmed by the Surgeon General’s latest—and societal and political developments, economic worries ranging from housing to debt to food insecurity and a lack of familial and community support. It is not an optimistic picture. At the same time, funding support for mental health is woefully lacking throughout the United States.

Mental Health America, one of the country’s leading mental health nonprofits, recently released its annual survey*, sharing trends and patterns of mental health conditions. Among the key findings of the report is that 21 percent of American adults are experiencing at least one mental illness, translating into roughly 50 million people; 55 percent of adults with a mental illness have not received any treatment; and 16 percent of youth report suffering from at least one major depressive episode in the past year.

The survey also provided a robust set of data points for additional conditions related to mental health care. The report’s conclusions are disquieting. Statistics show that the state of mental health, amplified by the pandemic, is on the rise for all age groups, while access to care is becoming even more difficult, especially among those groups who are marginalized.

From the Field Like so many other healthcare professions, mental health counselors are practicing a balancing act to fill gaps in staffing. The same mental health survey referenced above identified that in the United States, there are an estimated 350 individuals for every one mental health provider. Our Bay Path graduates in mental health counseling experience this reality every day, but like many in their field, they couldn’t imagine doing anything else.
"I wear two hats," says Monica Ardolino G’17, an outpatient clinician at Behavioral Health Network Inc. (BHN), based in Springfield. "I work 20 hours a week as a school support counselor for children in kindergarten to fifth grade, and 20 hours as an outpatient clinician, seeing clients at our BHN center. The common thread among all of my clients, young and old, has been COVID. I work with children who seem to be behind academically, socially, and emotionally. And at the outpatient clinic there are higher numbers of clients reporting anxiety and depression while struggling with coping skills that were diminished by our need to be continually adjusting to the pandemic. Seeing clients in person is more beneficial. And when they are feeling positive about themselves and their lives, it is very rewarding!"

Amanda Hichborn ’14 G’17, at left, has a similar busy schedule that takes her to various locations in the region. She works at River Valley Counseling Center as a program director for its outpatient mental health clinic in Westfield, MA; as program director for two certified community health clinics based in Holyoke, MA and Westfield; and she carries a small caseload of clients. “Even today, COVID has had an immense impact on the demand for therapeutic services. We almost cannot keep up,” she says. “As a supervisor, I’m faced with many challenges, but one of the main problems is we just don’t have enough certified counselors in the pipeline. And there are not enough resources to support clients and clinicians in practice. Yet another reason why the integrative team approach is helpful all around.”

As a practitioner who has been in the field for almost a decade, Hichborn sees positive changes happening in mental health. She says, “We have seen great success with our integrative healthcare team, comprised of a mental health counselor, case manager, medical assistant and peer recovery professional. Together, they are able to treat a client’s mental and physical needs. It’s multi-prong support that really works.”

APPROACHES TO MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELING At Bay Path, our MS in Clinical Mental Health Counseling program prepares students to be clinicians who celebrate and respect diversity and actively work to break down the stigma of mental health. Two years ago, the program was a recipient of a grant from the Behavioral Health Workforce Education and Training (BHWET) totaling $1,432,781 over four years, funded through the American Rescue Plan.

“The grant has been a game-changer,” says Dr. Kristina Hallett, at right, director of the MS in Clinical Mental Health Counseling degree. “With this funding, we are placing our graduate students in IBH settings, and they are learning collaboration and patient-centered care with other practitioners. More importantly, to become a licensed mental health counselor they must put in 600 hours of clinical practice. As many of our graduate students work, this grant allows us to give them a $10,000 stipend, so even if they take a leave from their present job, they will have income to support themselves or their families.

WHAT IS INTEGRATED BEHAVIORAL HEALTHCARE (IBH)?

IBH blends care in one setting for medical conditions and related behavioral health factors that affect health and well-being. IBH, a part of “whole-person care,” is a rapidly emerging shift in the practice of high-quality health care.

“Our philosophy in the program is that mental health is public health,” adds Dr. Hallett. “A growing body of research shows integrated behavioral health improves health and patient experience while reducing unnecessary costs in time, money and delays. With IBH, everyone benefits, particularly the most important person in this dynamic—the client.”

The information presented in the 2023 survey was collected in 2020 and is the first iteration of the report with data accumulated during the COVID-19 pandemic. As a result of limitations on data collection efforts imposed by the pandemic, as well as changes and updates to the DSM-5, the authors of the survey analysis stress that figures from the 2023 survey cannot accurately be compared to data from previous years.
In 1994, Wiezbicki-Stevens was working as a psychotherapist focused on seniors when she seized an opportunity to teach a course at Bay Path. Since then, she’s used her professional expertise and her personal passion for helping students to shape the sort of unique, career-focused learning experience for which Bay Path is known.

“I started as an adjunct, teaching Psychology of Aging,” she recalled. “But I’d been a practicing therapist, and my master’s in counseling included coursework in student development and cognitive psychology—how we think, how we learn, how we remember.”

Later, Wiezbicki-Stevens earned a doctoral degree in education, specializing in pedagogy, and this range of expertise enabled her to segue from adjunct work into a full-time role at Bay Path.

Starting as an academic counselor, she met with students about academic concerns and connected them with peer tutors. Eventually, she became a faculty member, developing and teaching what was then called the “First Year Experience.” This important course was a precursor to today’s WELL 100 class, which introduces Bay Path students to thinking about personal potential and how to become learners and leaders at the University, in their communities and in their lives.

In 2011, when Wiezbicki-Stevens became Chair of the Psychology Department, she wanted to give students exposure to experiential learning opportunities earlier in their college career than internships typically do. “I knew that offering co-ops to students in their second year could provide support for their career exploration, help them make connections with... courses, build up confidence and, of course, gain relevant work experience,” she explained. “But also, having the experience take place during sophomore year gives students something to look forward to and helps with engagement and retention.”

Each semester, eight to 10 students are accepted into the psychology program’s co-op, and each student is trained in their placement. “These are students who are eager for professional work experience in psychology and human services and to work with a diversity of populations,” said Wiezbicki-Stevens. “I meet with them individually to discuss their interests, strengths and skills, and what they’re looking for.” Students work for six to eight hours each week at partner agencies, which pay them directly, in roles that are scaled down to the appropriate experience level of a college student.

These community partnerships have enabled students to connect with children at Girls Inc. of the Valley; support victims of domestic violence at the YW Western Mass; work in several programs of ServiceNet Inc., one of the largest mental health agencies in Massachusetts; and assist with youth programming at the West Springfield Boys & Girls Club.

The co-op program differs from internships in that it also provides a weekly seminar, in which students come together to discuss and process the weightiness of service work and the situations to which they’re exposed and learn how to navigate workplace rules and boundaries as a helping professional.

“These are deep conversations about professional conduct, ethics, confidentiality, cultural humility and self-care,” explained Wiezbicki-Stevens. “Students have a lot of interest in trauma, but we also need to discuss how to set boundaries. And then, there’s also, ‘How do I ask my supervisor a question?’ ‘What is appropriate to ask, and what should I know to do on my own?’ Students will discuss how what they’re learning in a class like child development or psychopathology relates to their experiences at their co-op placement. It’s immersive, active learning.”

The success of the program has inspired Wiezbicki-Stevens and her colleagues in the Psychology Department to seek new ways to support students interested in service learning and making a difference. “The Forensic Psychology Program, under the direction of Dr. Diane Hall incorporates service learning in very creative ways. Dr. Sheila Foley and Dr. Vernon Percy have collaborated to develop a distinctive certificate program in youth development that is very popular. It’s a series of five classes offered to students who want to work with young people, and community-based learning is built into the coursework,” she explained.

Professor Wiezbicki-Stevens is also excited about the ongoing development of a professional advisory board, bringing together a diverse cohort of community organizations from psychology and health and human services agencies, to continually strengthen partnerships and evolve Bay Path’s curricula and networking opportunities, so students are prepared for employment upon graduation.

And then, there’s Wiezbicki-Stevens’ pet project, making sure she maintains strong connections with students well beyond graduation. “So many psych students keep in touch and come back to mentor our current students. I’m continuing to build on that, so that we can help students see all the professional options they have with this degree.”
In Memoriam

The University is saddened to share the passing of longtime Bay Path supporters: Dr. George Frederick Kalf, 92, of Warminster, Pennsylvania, on March 1, 2023, and Leon E. Maglathlin, Jr., 96, of Longmeadow, Massachusetts, on February 10, 2023.

It was through his late wife, Jeanne, Bay Path class of 1951, that Dr. Kalf became a friend and supporter of the University. After Jeanne's passing, he remained dedicated to this institution. The recipient of Bay Path's President's Award in 2015, Dr. Kalf was influential in the development of the MS in Physician Assistant Studies program and the Philip H. Ryan Health Science Center. He also established The Jeanne Williams Kalf ’51 Endowed Scholarship and The Dr. George F. Kalf Endowed Scholarship. In 2019, Dr. Kalf received an Honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters from the University.

Leon Maglathlin, Jr., was a former member and Chairman of the Board of Trustees at Bay Path University and was named Trustee Emeritus in 1996. As Chair, he presided over the selection of Carol Leary as Bay Path’s fifth president. Through the years, he was a generous supporter of Bay Path, and our community benefitted greatly from his philanthropy.

Eric Lesser, former Massachusetts state senator and Obama White House official, elected to University Board of Trustees

The University is pleased to announce that Eric Lesser, attorney, educator and former four-term state senator, representing the First Hampden and Hampshire districts of Massachusetts, has been elected to the Bay Path Board of Trustees. He began his term in March 2023.

“Eric Lesser has been a loyal and longtime supporter of Bay Path University, and he has a strong commitment to our mission and our students,” said Bay Path University President Sandra J. Doran. “His many years of public service at both the state and the national level have given him incredible knowledge and insight on government and policy that will add significant value to both our board and in furthering our initiatives at the University.”

As a state senator, Lesser led and served on numerous committees and commissions. He chaired the Joint Committee on Economic Development and Emerging Technologies; the Joint Committee on Tourism, Arts and Cultural Development; and the Senate Select Committee on Ethics. He also was vice chair of the Joint Transportation Committee and co-chaired the Massachusetts Special Commission on the Future of Work.

Among his many priorities, Lesser was a key proponent of the East-West Rail, a leading advocate for civics education, a champion for alleviating student debt and a national leader on the future of work.

Currently, Lesser is a senior counsel at WilmerHale, a Boston-based law firm, where he is a member of the Public Policy and Regulatory Affairs Group.

Lesser earned his law degree from Harvard Law School in 2015 and his bachelor's from Harvard College in 2007. He currently resides in Longmeadow with his family.

University Transitions to Three-School Academic Structure

Starting on March 1, Bay Path transitioned to a three-school academic structure. The new alignment was a result of cross-community collaborations as part of the University’s strategic planning process, Building One Bay Path. Each School is headed by a dean responsible for leading and coordinating the work of department chairs and program directors to support faculty and student success.

Bay Path’s three schools of academic study and their corresponding deans are:
- School of Education, Psychology & Humanities Dr. Ruth A.H. Lahti
- School of Management & Technology Dr. Thomas Loper
- School of Health & Natural Sciences Dr. Theresa DeVito

With this shift, Bay Path will be able to increase the accessibility and flexibility of course offerings and academic experiences for learners in their field of study. This new learning ecosystem will create multiple pathways for learners to earn credentials at any point in their career journey, from certificates to doctoral degrees. In addition, the three-school model will modernize and allow for efficiencies in the management of academic programs that can contribute to program growth.

“I am looking forward to working with the deans as they lead their three new schools,” said John Caron, interim vice president of Academic Affairs. “This model creates new opportunities for collaboration for our faculty and staff that builds on the commonalities of their subject areas. And this new structure will better enable Bay Path to adapt and quickly respond to the rapidly changing needs of the world and workforce.”

University Launches MSN Program

In response to the growing demand for nurse practitioners, educators and administrators, Bay Path University has announced a fully online, new Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) program, which has begun accepting nursing candidates for the fall 2023 semester.

The MSN program is a direct response to the dire need for registered nurses nationwide—a need that became more acute throughout the COVID-19 pandemic. The degree will address the critical problem of the nursing shortage by expanding the talent pipeline for nurses so they can earn a degree that blends these key areas: the latest developments in patient care, leadership training, best practices in management and foundations of teaching.

“Our MSN is a creative and innovative approach to support career development for nurses,” stated Dr. Linda Adams-Wendling, chief nurse administrator and director of the MSN/DNP nursing program. “Many times, nurses who are ready to pursue a graduate degree are often not sure if they want to be nurse educators or nurse managers/leaders/administrators. Our degree provides our nursing students with skills and competencies in each of these areas. As a result, they can take advantage of more opportunities, as well as fulfill a critical need for nurses whose knowledge and experience are fundamental for patient-centered care and the development of the next generation of nurses.”

The online MSN is also a pathway to Bay Path’s online Doctor of Nursing Practice–Family Nurse Practitioner program, a terminal nursing credential preparing nurses with the critical skills needed to translate evidence-based care into practice, improve systems of care and measure outcomes for patients and communities. Nurses who wish to pursue a terminal nursing credential and who have graduated from Bay Path’s MSN may also be able to apply courses to the doctoral program.

Our accreditation status: The master’s degree program in nursing at Bay Path University is pursuing initial accreditation by the Commission of Collegiate Nursing Education, 655 K Street NW, Suite 750, Washington, DC 20001, 202-887-6791. Applying for accreditation does not guarantee that accreditation will be granted.
Our Students Are Amazing!

Every April, we celebrate student accomplishments during Academic Achievement Day. This year was no different.

From poster presentations to panels to talks, over 100 students shared their achievements on April 11 with alumni, faculty, staff, friends and family. One of the highlights of the day was the ribbon-cutting ceremony for the newly renovated science labs in Carr 209 and Carr 313. The space transformations were made possible by the generosity of longtime Bay Path champion, Eileen Stern; the University and the many soon-to-be women scientists in our undergraduate program are grateful for her support. It was a Carpe Diem day.

Clockwise from top left: Dr. Diane Hall's Domestic Violence class was front and center with its Clothesline Project. The class partnered with Holyoke-based Alianza, which offers support for people affected by domestic violence, and worked with Bay Path alumna Emily Pelletier Skoczylas ’11, the education and outreach coordinator of the organization; For over 25 years, Eileen Stern has been a dedicated member of our Bay Path community. At the ribbon cutting, she was joined by Stern and WiSH (Women in STEM Honors) Scholars, a grateful community of budding women scientists who offered their heartfelt thanks; the highlight of the day was the student presentations; Stern proudly wears the new Stern Scholars stole, worn at graduation, created for her steadfast support for the program.

Incremental Learning, Monumental Change: Bay Path Builds Credential Learning Program

“Innovative, career-based education that helps women thrive, professionally and personally, is our mission,” said Bay Path University President Sandra J. Doran.

In January, Bay Path’s commitment to increasing access to career-based learning opportunities for women was strengthened by a $299,810 grant award from the Strada Education Network and selection into the national Credential As You Go initiative.

Through the Strada grant, the University embarked on the preliminary phase of building and staffing Bay Path’s earn-learn program. The earn-learn approach is designed to enable working adults to take courses in skills that uniquely position them to continually advance in their careers.

Pulling together resources from the University, employer partners and educational platforms, Bay Path will be able to offer a comprehensive catalog of trainings and courses, laddering up to degrees, certificates, industry certifications, licenses, badges and micro-credentials that can be earned over the course of a learner’s entire career.

Through Credential As You Go, Bay Path joins a cohort of 26 institutions of higher education and two certifying organizations that were selected from more than HOW MANY to help build a framework of incremental credentialing, which marks an important and necessary redesign of the American higher education system.

The new framework looks to “unbundle” the notion of a traditional degree, presenting alternative on- and off-ramps to education and enabling learners to build on their skill sets and advance in their professions in a way that’s affordable, relevant and specific to each learner’s goals.

A poll conducted last year by the Wall Street Journal and the University of Chicago-based research
The crowd was at near capacity at the MassMutual Center in Springfield to see over 700 Bay Path undergraduate and graduates receive their degrees. The May 7 event was preceded by a week of traditional celebrations, including the ever-popular Strawberries and Champagne, Physician Assistant Graduation, and the Doctoral Hooding.

At the 126th Commencement, the University was honored to bestow an honorary doctor of humane letters upon Helen Caulton-Harris, commissioner of the Division of Health and Human Services for the city of Springfield and the first Black woman to hold that title.

"We know the power that education has to transform women’s lives, and too often, it is not available to those for whom it could be most transformational. Today’s employers and employees need a model that is responsive, accessible and relevant to both their short- and long-term objectives," said President Doran. "We passionately believe in the potential of these new models to create more opportunities for more learners, and we have amazing partners who share this vision."

The new framework enables learners to build on their skill sets and advance in their professions in an affordable, relevant and specific way.

group NORC, formerly known as the National Opinion Research Center, found that more than half of Americans think a four-year university degree is not worth the cost.

“This developing model has the potential to address equity issues that have long plagued traditional higher ed and really inhibited people’s ability to get ahead,” said Jeremy Anderson, vice president for Learning, Innovation, Analytics, and Technology at Bay Path. “Shorter, alternative credentials offer a more affordable, faster path to good-paying jobs and can be a continual resource, as people’s work lives can now last 60 years. To help people consistently upskill and reskill, we can’t saddle them with large amounts of debt.”

Congressman Richard Neal and Bay Path University Celebrate $1 Million Federal Earmark to Launch Student Success Center

The mood was celebratory as hundreds of Bay Path students, faculty, staff, trustees and supporters greeted Congressman Richard Neal (D-MA) as he arrived on campus.

The occasion was the announcement of a $1 million earmark to develop Bay Path’s innovative and groundbreaking Student Success Center.

“As one of the premier learning institutions in New England, Bay Path University continues to pride itself on providing students the resources needed to succeed both in the classroom and in the workforce,” said Neal. “Bay Path has a long history of serving a diverse student body and creating opportunities for first-generation college students and disadvantaged members of our communities. I am proud to have procured funding that will allow Bay Path to launch its Student Success Center, furthering its mission of empowering students to become leaders in their careers.”

Funding will be used to complete the work to launch a new Student Success Center that will deliver holistic, coordinated, wraparound academic, financial and career development support services that are easily accessible 24/7, both online and on campus. The Center will also accommodate the needs of Bay Path’s diverse student populations, integrating its services into a student’s academic program through systematic communications and touchpoints throughout the undergraduate experience.

The Student Success Center will be under the leadership of Dr. Heather Gould, associate dean of Advising and Student Support, and Dr. Jeremy Anderson, vice president of Learning Innovation, Analytics, & Technology.
26th Annual Women’s Leadership Conference ignites a sellout crowd

Bay Path’s Women’s Leadership Conference (WLC) returned to Springfield’s MassMutual Center on April 6 with the theme: “Ignite.” The event is a perennial favorite for women and men to become re-energized and inspired to take the next move in their professional career, take stock of their personal goals or take a leap of faith. This year’s WLC was no exception, as the feedback from the sellout audience confirmed the face-to-face experience was all they thought it would be with comments like: “...the best WLC I’ve attended... Robin Roberts could have kept on talking...I can’t wait for next year.”

We can’t either. See you April 4, 2024.

Clockwise from top left: Robin Roberts, ABC “Good Morning America” co-anchor and author, had audience members on the edge of their seats; Robin Roberts was on the other side of the interview as President Sandra J. Doran posed questions that covered Roberts’ beginnings in broadcasting to her rise as an American icon; Tunde Oyenegin, an author and well-known Peloton instructor, gave a high-energy presentation that leaned heavily on her The New York Times best-selling memoir, Speak; Attendees at the MassMutual Center; The crowds tell the whole story—the WLC is the women’s event in the region; Betsy Allen-Manning got the day off to a good start as the morning keynote speaker.
All year, the Bay Path alumni community is engaged in activities that range from supporting our students through mentorships to cheering on our performing arts students to making our graduates look the best they can on Commencement Day. The next chapter of alumni leadership

As an alumna of Bay Path University, Stephanie O’Leary ’05 G’16 G’17 has done a remarkable job leading the Alumni Association Council as its president and the youngest person to serve on our Board of Trustees. As president, O’Leary navigated the Alumni Association through a pandemic, introduced alumni to a new university president, attended countless events in person and online, reimagined reunion into a community celebration, worked to start the Wildcat Pantry on campus, helped relaunch the association’s strategic committees, and nurtured the association to a place where it now surpasses pre-pandemic participation and membership levels. O’Leary remains an advocate for higher education, helping to raise the profile of her alma mater and ensuring that Bay Path’s mission continues to be realized. We are deeply grateful for all she has done.

Leading us into the next chapter of Bay Path’s history is Miranda Dal Zovo ’10 G’16. Dal Zovo graduated from the Bay Path One-Day-A-Week Saturday program in 2010 with her bachelor’s degree. She went on to complete Bay Path’s MBA program in 2015. As a proud member of the Bay Path community, she is always looking for more ways to be more involved.

In 2020, Dal Zovo became a member of our association and is currently chair of the Reunion Committee. She helped lead our 125th Celebration Reunion Weekend activities in 2022, and she has been busy planning for another great Reunion on October 14. We are excited to see how Dal Zovo uses her process management skills as our next president! She invites you to join our Paths of Participation fundraising effort detailed on the inside back cover.
Cris Caruso ’93, founder of Savoire Financial, knows the ins and outs of dollars and cents. And she also knows that paying it forward makes perfect sense for anyone who wants to practice responsible wealth management.

For over 18 years, Caruso has worked in the financial services industry with a specialty in helping Gen X women and LGBTQ+ clients achieve their professional and life goals. “As a member of the LGBTQ+ community, I understand the needs and concerns of LGBTQ+ households or individuals as they plan for their futures,” she said. “First and foremost, I create a safe space where we can talk, and then outline how we can put a comprehensive plan in place, depending on the scenario, that could include estate planning or investing for retirement. I help them manage their money wisely.”

Caruso found her niche as a financial planner during a journey that started as an undergraduate at Bay Path majoring in hospitality management. She later also earned a degree in sociology and gender studies at the University of Southern Maine. In the beginning of her career, she worked primarily in nonprofits. Eventually, she worked for a software company in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, that was eventually bought out, and she moved to Maryland.

“I realized at one point I needed a change,” Caruso said. “I have always been interested in personal finance and how to leverage money. Deciding to be a financial planner was a magical use of my educational background and my hospitality skills. Everything blended together.”
And when it comes to her own financial planning, Caruso practices what she preaches.

“I sat down with my wife, and we decided that charitable giving was very important to us. Personally, I am very passionate about students who are marginalized or first in their family to go to college. We decided to make a focused gift that would support those students who need financial assistance just as they are so close to achieving their goal of a degree. And we also have Bay Path in our estate plan.”

Caruso has a philosophy that is the perfect complement to financial planning. “I believe we have an obligation to lift as we climb,” she said. “When we are successful, we should give back to the places that have gotten us where we are. It doesn’t have to be an all or nothing proposition—give what you can. When multiple people make financial gifts, then the power of those gifts are amplified. And that’s an impact!”

Carpe Diem!

If you would like more information on planned giving, please contact Crystal Neuhauser, Vice President of Institutional Advancement, at cneuhauser@baypath.edu, or visit www.baypath.giftlegacy.com
Were You Close?
A memoir of sibling loss and unexpected grief.

For Anne Pinkerton G’16, Bay Path’s MFA program provided the support and structure she needed to pen a telling chronicle on the loss of her brother—known as Dr. Dave—and her resulting and unexpected grief.

A successful radiologist and elite outdoor athlete, Dr. Dave appeared to be invulnerable. Gifted with a deep reserve of natural ability, he took on the most demanding of outdoor challenges, from triathlons to mountain biking, and conquered them all. A born leader, Dr. Dave was widely respected by his peers for both his generosity of spirit and keen athletic prowess.

When the news arrived that Dr. Dave was missing during his quest to conquer all 54 of Colorado’s 14-ers—peaks above 14,000 feet—Anne Pinkerton at first did not believe it. Soon, the worst was confirmed: Her brother had fallen 200 feet to his death.

Were You Close? became Anne’s own quest for the layered truth of what happened on the mountain and her outlet for capturing her personal grief journey, which she hopes will provide solace for others who have lost a sibling.

CLASS NOTES

Anne Byrnie Grace ’59 Greetings to all my former classmates! My husband, Jim, and I celebrated our 60th wedding anniversary on May 26, 2022 with a memorable party given to us by our children: Maureen, Karen, Russ and Dan. We also became great-grandparents for the first time, and are expecting two more babies this summer! We are very grateful our family lives fairly close by, and we see them regularly. I keep active by going to the Y for Aquacise classes twice a week and enjoy frequent walks (2-3 miles) down Main Street in our lovely town of Old Saybrook, CT. My favorite hobby is writing. I belong to a writers’ group at our Senior Center and have been keeping daily journals for nearly 40 years! They are all hand written, so now I worry that my eight grandkids, and now great-grands, won’t be able to read them! God bless you all! Anne

ALUMNI PROFILES

Victoria-Ann Rodriguez ‘12, G’17
LEADING THE WAY

After earning her undergraduate degree in legal studies and her master's in leadership and negotiation, Victoria-Ann Rodriguez ‘12, G’17 still sees Bay Path as a place where she's able to bring her varied interests and talents together to foster an empowered community. As a senior paralegal in the litigation department at MassMutual, Rodriguez is responsible for deciphering the legalese in lawsuits and death claims that are critical to the functioning of a multi-billion-dollar life insurance company. That professional experience, and the fact that she’s a young woman still in the early years of her career, resonates with the Bay Path students Rodriguez teaches as an adjunct in the Justice Studies department. The connection Rodriguez has both to Bay Path and to her local community is an ongoing source of passion and motivation. She is an inheritor of a cherished heritage and a conduit for passing ambition and success to the next generation of Hispanics. She upholds her family's tradition of helping plan, organize and run Springfield's Annual Puerto Rican Parade. “My favorite day of the year,” she noted. “We walk into the heart of the Puerto Rican community in the North End of Springfield, and the streets are filled.”

Victoria recently served as the emcee for the 2023 Women’s Leadership Conference and now has her sights on bigger things. Go to www.baypath.edu and click on Bay Pathway Online for her full story.

Marianne Walker G’09
FORTUNE FAVORS THE BOLD

“I’m very competitive. I like to win,” said Marianne Walker G’09, describing her experience as a contestant on one of the most successful and recognizable game shows in America, Wheel of Fortune. Before earning her master’s in occupational therapy, Walker played soccer, basketball and softball at Bay Path. She approached the opportunity to spin the famous wheel the same way she approaches her life. “My family has a word, ‘aventura.’ It’s like an adventure, with a twist,” she explained. “When there’s a chance to do something outside your traditional day-to-day, you have to go for it.” Walker had been watching Wheel of Fortune for as long as she could remember, and the show looms large in memories of visits to her grandmother on Cape Cod. “I would always tell her, ‘I’m going to be on that show one day.’” Every year, somewhere around a million people apply to appear on “Wheel of Fortune,” and only about 600 are selected.

Jillian Morgan G’19
A DEGREE THAT OPENS DOORS AND FILLS PANTRIES

“I’m always thinking about promotion—how we’re telling the story of The Food Bank, explaining what our impact is and demonstrating how we’re responding to the needs in the community,” explained Jillian Morgan G’19, the director of philanthropy for The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts. Morgan arrived at The Food Bank in 2019, having spent years searching for a career that could bring together her creative ambitions, her desire to have an impact on her community and the professional skill set she’d worked hard to develop. Today, as director of philanthropy, she manages a budget for her division and continually develops ideas on raising awareness and funds for The Food Bank and the many programs, and ultimately people, connected to it.

Your generosity also helps with our Alumni Participation Rate (APR).

Why is that important?

Bay Path’s APR is the percentage of alumni that give back.

A high APR carries weight for college rankings. Data shows there is a correlation between highly regarded universities and their APR. Some corporations and foundations make funding decisions based in part on participation rates as evidence that alumni, who know their institution best, are also investing in its success — so higher participation rates translate directly into increased outside funding for Bay Path.

No matter the size of your gift, you are still a philanthropist. Please help our APR—and our students. Your personal involvement in its many forms will send a strong signal to your former classmates, fellow alumni and potential students and supporters. Take your path back to Bay Path.

Any and all support counts.
This year, we will celebrate graduation years ending in 3 and 8, but all class years are welcome to join in the festivities.
